Paul Reaney was a long-serving full back with the hugely successful Leeds United team of the 1960s and 1970s.

Reaney wore the No.2 shirt for Leeds with distinction and, in a team renowned for its hard approach to the game, with admirably little trouble caused over an impressive 15 year period.

Paul would go on to make over 550 appearances for Leeds scoring 6 goals.

He also represented his country 3 times. Reaney's appearance for England has assumed greater importance in recent years as even though he was regarded as "white" during his playing career, he is viewed by many as "black" or mixed race now. His England debut was nine years before that of Viv Anderson, who is widely credited as the first black man to play for England.

Allan Clarke, nicknamed "Sniffer", played for Walsall, Fulham, Leicester City, Leeds United and Barnsley, and won 19 international caps for England. He was one of English football's greatest goal scorers who shot to fame in the much-admired and feared Leeds United team of the late 1960s and early 1970s.

He was briefly Lincoln City manager for six months but he was sacked on November 30, 1990 to be replaced by Steve Thompson
